At Leeds, Engiand, by watter and perachulist named Higgins was killed, and a young woman, a Miss Davoy, had a marrow escape from death. The ascent of the couple was watched by quite a large number of people, and when the balloch was released it tapidly soared upward, amid the cheers of the crowd. A cross bar was parrow escape from death. The ascent of machines have a world-wide reputhe cheers of the crowd. A cross bar was attached to the balloon, and it was the intention of the couple to give a trapize performance when they had reached a sufficient height, and afterwards to descend by means of a parachute. After the balloon had risen a short distance it was caught in a current of sir, and while still ascending drifted sideways until it struck a telegraph pole. The couple were sitting on the bar, and when the balloon struck the pole the bar ewayed to and fro in a frightful manner, threatening at every moment to throw them to the ground. Miss Devoy, toinking it would be safe to drop from the har before she was thrown from it, lowered herself by her hande, hung for a moment, and then let go. The height from which she dropped was not great, and she innded on the ground unhurt. Released from her weight, the balloon swung upward, and as it did so, Higgins who still retained his place on the bar, became en'angled in the telepraph wires, and in a flatb he was swept off the bar and fetl, twisting and turning upon a fance. The women often visited a cabin in the outskirte of the town, at which two negroes were frequent visitors. A nonight a party of thirty men went to the cabin, and, knocking down the door, entered and captured the inmates. They were stripped to the waist and bound to trees. The men then took turns flogging their forty-five to fifty lashes each, when they fainted from pain. The men took the terrible punishment better, and were given a larger dose. After the women regained conscioueness they and the men were allowed to return to the cabin and dress. Then they started north on the railroad track.
